However while returning to base it is strongly believed that an electrical fault occurred leaving the crew without communications. Flying above cloud the captain was left with two options, abandon the Wellington or descend through the cloud cover in an attempt to establish their position. Sgt Ford chose the latter and at around 0200 the Wellington crashed into the side of a hill at Widdington Farm, Rushall near Upavon airfield in Wiltshire and disintegrated. Wilde F/O G Parkinson - injured P/O R Stokes Sgt Perkins F/ Sgt Fitchett		T/O 2350 Chipping Warden andset course for the Rennes area of France on nickelling operation. Outbound a pinpoint was obtained on the south coast over Portland and the French coast was crossed a mile or so off track. Course was then altered for the target area. When SW of the Orne and in the Mortain-Domfront region, flying straight and level at 16,500 ft, hit below the port engine by predicted flak at 0120 hrs. The engine and port mainplane being badly damaged. At no time did anyone see searchlights. W/C Bray tried to continue but was forced to turn back as he was unable to maintain altitude. While recrossing the coast at 0135 hrs, there was much searchlight activity and light flak and though no hits were scored, the bomber lost 2,000 ft in taking evasive action. Over the sea Nickels were jettisoned and these carried away the trailing aerial. An SOS was transmitted by wireless and the IFF equipment was switched on. By this time the wellington was almost impossible to control and at 0210 hrs a ditching was made. After thirty four hours in their dinghy, an Air sea Rescue launch located the crew. No one was too badly hurt, though their skipper had sustained a broken nose	Page 234 Bomber Command Losses

They successfully dropped their load of two agents, six containers and one package on the target at the OBRAZ 108 DZ, Poland. Homebound flying at 200 ft, shot down by a night-fighter, crashing at Slagille 4 km ENE Soro, Denmark. F/S Miecznik managed to evade and during his debriefing, disclosed that over Zealand, with the second pilot, Sgt E.Kasprzak at the controls, they were attacked by a JU88, which the Halifax shot down. The aircraft was damaged and as they were down to 200 feet they were forced to make a crash-landing. Unfortunately it crashed into a farmhouse with five people (three adults and two children) in it, setting it on fire. Miecznik was thrown out of the bomber breaking his leg and his arm. He, the second pilot and the rear gunner, Sgt Puchala, were taken to hospital in Ringsted. Sgt Kasprzak died shortly afterwards, but Miecznik stayed in hospital until 1Nov43 when, from that date, his 'journey was arranged for him'. He arrived back in England, via Stockholm, 24Jan44.	Page 90 Flights of the Forgotten Page 309-310 Agents by Moonlight Page 322 Bomber Command Losses 1943 Roll of Honour Website Lost Bomber website Telegram from AA Stockholm to Air Ministry/ RAF Tempsford Special Forces Roll of Honour website http://pilot138raf.republika.pl/

They went down to Angouleme and in the target area met with high patchy cloud, rain showers and thick fog covered the ground. There was no response on 'Rebecca' from the target or from two special 'Eureka' beacons that were set up in this area. On the way back they flew over a well lit aerodrome, SE of Thouars (35 km south of Saumur) where night flying was taking place - 'No action developed'. With bad weather at base and at the two diversions, Swinderby and Woodbridge, Caldwell decided to bale his crew out in the Spilsby area at 0545. All landed safely (including their pet Fox terrier). Soon after crossing the French coast and flying at 16,000 ft the Wellington was hit in the port engine (probably by flak) and both turrets were rendered unserviceable. After aborting the mission and jettisoning the leaflets over the Channel the crew eventually regained the south coast. By this yime however the bomber was flying in and out of increasing amounts of cloud and at around 2145 hrs, uncertain of their position, the crew took to their parachutes. It was later discovered their a/c had crashed between 1 and 2 miles south of Finmere airfield in Buckinghamshire	Page 268 Bomber Command Losses Vol 7

There was no reception committee at the DZ so they aborted the mission and turned for home. The aircraft was climbing to altitude to return to Tempsford when at about 3,500 feet they passed over a train which fired on them from two flat cars with 20mm and 40mm canon. The aircraft was hit twice, once on the starboard bomb bay which caught fire. The starboard engine was hit first and was knocked out. The bomb bay doors were jammed when they tried to jettison the burning gear. The two female agents left the plane through the Joe Hole with the tail gunner confirming that there parachutes had opened. The remainder of the crew stayed in the plane . As the plane crash landed near Bernay (Eure) the starboard wing came off at about 50 feet off the ground which resulted in the devastating nature of the crash Sgt Gillcash was thrown about 150 feet from the aircraft and was knocked unconscious. When he came to the plane was completely burning and he was unable to locate any others of the crew. Some French helped him but his wounds were serious and the Germans captured him at the farm in which he was being given shelter. Those killed were buried 6March 1944 in Ste-Croix Communal Cemetery. 30/31.5.44	Wellington Mk III BJ597 - O	30 OTU RAF	F/O J.F. Boullier - Pilot	Bulkington, Wiltshire, UK	T?O 2315 hrs from Hixon on nickelling operation to France. While flying some 16 km W of Cherbourg, at 15,000 ft the starboard engine caught fire. Distress calls were broadcast but none were acknowledged and eventually the Wellington crossed the south coast (at 8,000) ft continuing to seek assistance. The weather conditions were far from ideal and at 0145 hrs, now down to 4,000 ft and with a thick blanket of cloud beneath the crew baled out, leaving their aircraft to crash at Bulkington, 4 miles SW of Devizes, Wiltshire. Some sources claim this a/c was shot down by a night-fighter and crashed in southern Holland at Tholen-Lepelstraat. Huub Van Sabben claims that it was LL276 and not this aircraft that was shot down at Tholen-Lepelstraat as reported in some sources. It was lost without trace on the southern route to Belgium. It was either intercepted by a night fighter or crashed in the North Sea off the Dutch SW coast. There were no survivors and no known graves. All are commemorated on the Runnymede Memorial. LL251 departed Blida at 2050, climbing to maintain 8,000 feet. At this height it was noticed that puffs of black smoke were coming from the port outer engine with fluctuating rpm. The pilot elected to return to Blida. At 2210 the engine faltered even more. The engine was feathered, the bomb doors were opened and the containers jettisoned. It became impossible to maintain height at 150 mph and OAT 28C. A well lit ship was spotted some 10 miles away and the crew were ordered to ditching positions. The impact was at 100 mph. The automatic dinghy release failed to release and those crew men that re-entered the fuselage to pull the manual release were overcome by the petrol fumes from the burst bomb bay overload tanks They were dragged clear through the rear escape hatch although it was discovered that the Navigator F/O Farr was missing and later presumed drowned. At 2315 they were picked up by a lifeboat from the British Hospital ship Principasse Giovanni bound for Oran.	Roll of Honour website Page 315 Agents by Moonlight Page 326 Bomber Command Losses 1944 Page 103 A Noble Pair of Brothers CWGC website Lost Bomber website Special Forces Roll of Honour website

The aircraft was last reported by Hdqtrs 46 Group to be at ALG B-58 Melsbroek in Belgium on 18 Sep 1944, with a damaged tail wheel. It is assumed that the aircraft took off again from ALG B-58 Melsbroek without booking or warning the responsible authorities, and that some kind of accident occurred on the return flight. No messages were received from the aircraft. No. 48 Sqdn Base was located at RAF Station Down Ampney.	www.pegasusarchive.org.uk CWGC website Storr, Allan (ed.). (2006). Lieut. Lord was pilot and captain of an aircraft detailed to drop supplies to our troops, who were closely surrounded at Arnhem. For accuracy this had to be done at 900 feet. While approaching the target at 1,500 feet the aircraft was severely damaged and set on fire. Flt. Lieut. Lord would have been justified in withdrawing or even in abandoning his aircraft but, knowing that supplies were desperately needed, he continued on his course. Twice going down to 900 feet under very intense fire, he successfully dropped his containers. His task completed he ordered his crew to abandon the aircraft, making no attempt himself to leave. A few seconds later the aircraft fell in flames, only one of the crew surviving. By continuing his mission in a damaged and burning plane, twice descending to 900 feet to ensure accuracy, and finally by remaining at the controls to give his crew a chance of escape, Flt. Lieut. Lord displayed supreme valour and self-sacrifice. The RASC dispatchers were from 63 (Airborne) Comp. There were 4 different dropsites with five planes allotted to each site. Each plane had 8 crew. They took off in late afternoon knowing that they would be flying in the night as they approached the north. KH158 was heading for drop zone "Morris" ENE of Genoa The weather was bad with poor visibility and few crews were able to see the drop site fires so many drops were aborted. Of the 20 planes that set out 6 failed to return. Four crashed high in the mountains, one crashed near Cantalupa but the sixth disappeared without trace. The wreckage of the crashed planes were eventually found but there was no news of the sixth Liberator. The crew members of the sixth Liberator, KH158,, were officially posted missing - a sad ending for brave men. The disappearance of KH158 has yet to be solved.	http://www.saafmuseum.co.za/memories.htm http://freepages.genealogy.rootsweb.com/~stormrhb/millar/millartm.htm "Heroism Beyond Praise" CWGC website

5.11.44	Halifax Mk II BB338 FS-M	148 Sqdn RAF	F/Sgt Uttley - Pilot	Sevid, Yugoslavia	aircraft lost on supply mission ICARUS 108 to Yugoslavia. Developed trouble with port engine, fire started, 15 containers jettisoned into sea. Aircraft ditched 2 km from land near Drvenik Island, Sevid, Yugoslavia. Ditching successfully, the crew had paddled in a dinghy to the line of the shore. Spotting a Liberator aircraft, they had fired Very cartridges and put out flourescene colouring on the water. The Liberator had seen them and stayed until an Air Sea Rescue launch arrived to pick them up. It took off from Shepherds Grove, along with 14 other Stirlings. 13 of these returned to base, as low clouds, fog and rain set in. One of the Stirlings managed to land at Gardermoen, and LK147 was only about one kilometre from the runway when it crashed. Eyewitnesses said that they could see smoke and fire in an engine on the left side of the plane before it crashed into the ground, killing all 20 onboard. They were first buried at the crash site, but were later moved to Vestre Gravlund in Oslo. Passengers were: Pvt Frederick Brown Pvt Thomas Dalrymple Brown Cpl Charles Gavaghan Pvt Thomas Laycock Pvt George Alan Little Pvt Robert McKeown Pvt Horace Newby Pvt Joseph Pagan Pvt George Thomas Phipps L/Cpl Thomas Errington Richardson Lt Frederick Geoffrey Saville L/Sgt Frank Raymond Seabury Pvt Joseph Smethurst L/Cpl Alexander Barr Todd	http://www.raf38group.org/196squadron http://home.no.net/t/hsord/short_stirling_mkiv_lk147.htm http://ktsorens.tihlde.org/flyvrak/sorkedal.en.html CWGC website https://www.facebook.com/LK147?ref=hl

Supply dropping flights to guerrilla forces in Malaya were made until the Japanese surrender and on 15 November 1945 the squadron was disbanded
No 31 Squadron RAF	Lahore, Pakistan (was part of India) (Feb 1941 - 26.3.41, Sept 1941 - 18.2.43) Drigh Road, Pakistan (was part of India) (26.3.41 - Sept 1941) Dhubalia, India (18.2.43 - 21.5.43) Khargpur, Bengal, India (21.5.43 - 12.2.44) Agartala, Tripura, India (12.2.44 - 11.7.44, 1.11.44 - 1.1.45) Basal, Pakistan (was part of India) (11.7.44 - 1.11.44) Comilla, Bangladesh (was part of India) (1.1.45 - 6.2.45) Hathazari, Bangladesh (was part of India) (6.2.45 - 15.5.45) Kyaukpyu, India (15.5.45 - Aug 1945)	Valentia DC-2K Dakota I, III, IV	On 1 st April 1939 the squadrons role was changed from army co-operation to bomber transport, The Bomber Transport Flight India being absorbed. Conversion to Valentias had begun in January and these were replaced by DC-2s during 1941, both types being used to carry troops during the Iraqi uprising. During the Japanese invasion of Burma the squadron evacuated casualties and flew supplies to the small army force retreating to the Indian frontier and in April 1942 Dakotas began to replace the older DC-2s. In May 1943 No 31 Squadron was fully equipped with Dakotas and for the rest of the war was engaged in supply dropping missions for the 14 th Army in Burma apart from a period from July - October 1944 when it was withdrawn for glider towing training. Soon after the Japanese surrender the squadron moved to Singapore and a month later was sent to Java to support the Allied forces there until disbanded on 30 September 1946 Not to be confused with 31 Sqdn SAAF which also had RAF crewmen
No 37 Squadron RAF	Cerignola, Italy (14.12.43 - 29.12.43) Tortorella, Italy (29.12.43 - 2.10.45)	Wellington III, X Liberator VI	Liberators from No 37 Squadron carried out supply drops to Yugoslav partisan forces during 1944 and 45

After some supply dropping flights over Yugoslavia the squadron re-equipped with Wellington XIVs and was engaged in attacks on enemy shipping off the coasts of northern Italy for the rest of the war
No 44 SAAF Squadron	March 1944-February 1945: Cairo West February-December 1945: Bari	April 1944-December 1945: Douglas Dakota III	No.44 Squadron operated over a very wide area, which included most of the Mediterranean as well as routes to the Sudan and East Africa, and occasional trips to Russia. Although it only operated from two main bases (Cairo West until February 1945 then Bari in Italy until December 1945), a number of detachments were scattered around the Mediterranean, Africa and the Middle East. In December 1944 the detachment at Bari began to fly operations in support of the Yugoslav partisans, taking the squadron's aircraft over enemy territory on a regular basis.
No 48 Squadron RAF	Down Ampney, UK (24.2.44 - Aug 1945)	Dakota III, IV	On D-Day No 48 Squadron provided thirty aircraft to drop paratroops before dawn, following up with twenty two glider towing sorties. At Arnhem in September the squadron lost a third of its strength flying resupply missions in the face of intense flak after successfully towing forty nine gliders in the first two days of the airborne landings. After taking part in the crossing of the Rhine No 48 Squadron was sent to India in August 1945 but the Japanese surrender resulted in its disbandment on 16 January 1946
No 51 Squadron RAF	Dishforth, UK (9.12.39 - 6.5.42)	Whitley III, IV, V	On the outbreak of World War Two the squadron carried out leaflet raids until the German invasion of France and the Low Countries in May 1940 resulted in bombing operations being started
No 58 Squadron RAF	Linton on Ouse, UK (20.4.38 - 6.10.39)	Whitley III	On the first day of the war seven of the squadron's Whitleys went leaflet dropping over the Ruhr

Flying began in March with glider towing exercises and supply dropping missions over France begun in April. On D Day the squadron sent twenty three aircraft with paratroops to the initial dropping zone, following up during the day with eighteen more towing gliders. During the first two days of the airborne landings at Arnhem, No 190 Sqdn flew forty six sorties, all but six towing gliders. Fifty three supply flights were then made in the face of heavy anti-aircraft fire, losing eleven aircraft in three days. During the Rhine crossing in March 1945 thirty Stirlings towed gliders to the landing zone and in April the squadron was busy flying fuel for the army when divisions outran their supply lines. In May army units were carried to Norway to disarm the German garrison and the squadron converted to Halifaxes. After a period of general transport duties No 190 Squadron disbanded on 28 December 1945

The Unit's role was radar countermeasures and this entailed the identification of enemy radar patterns and wavelengths. Initially Wellingtons, Mosquitos and Halifaxes were used although the later two types did not begin operations until June. Missions were flown mainly over Germany, France and the Low Countries but some were over the Bay of Biscay to check radar used against Coastal Command anti-submarine patrols. Between September 1944 and February 1945 USAAF two seater Lightnings were attached to the squadron and in November 1944 much time was spent in searching for radio signals from V2s, although these were later found to be uncontrolled. In January 1945 the Wellington flew its last operations and on 22 August 1945 the squadron disbanded to form the basis of the Central Signals Establishment

199 Sqdn RAF, 100 Group	North Creake, UK (1 May 1944 - 19 July 1945)	Stirling III Halifax III	In May 1944 the squadron became non operational from its minelaying and bombing duties and trained for countermeasures duties with No 100 Group. On D-Day the squadron put up a force of Stirlings equipped with various methods of radar jamming to simulate a large collection of ships and aircraft heading for the Pas-de-Calais area. This confused the enemy at a time when the main armada of invasion craft was heading for Normandy and resulted in enemy reserves being retained away from the battle area until too late to affect the landings. It continued to use these methods in support of the main bomber force by confusing enemy defensive radars until the end of the war. Halifaxes beginning to replace the Stirlings in April 1945. 233 Sqdn RAF		Dakota	All thirty of the Dakotas flew to Normandy with the first lift on the 5th June 1944, six towing gliders, the remainder carrying men of the 3rd Parachute Brigade. Two of their aircraft were lost, and a further two were brought down on the following day when the main glider lift of the 6th Airborne Division took place. On the 17th September 1944, twenty-two Dakotas participated in the first lift of 1st Airborne Division to their landing zones around Arnhem, each aircraft bringing in a Horsa glider without loss. On the following day, sixteen of their aircraft brought in Horsas and emerged similarly unscathed, but the resupply flights of the following days cruelly exposed the slow-moving transport aircraft to enemy fire, and 233 Squadron lost three Dakotas on Wednesday 20th September, and another two days later Following their part in Operation Market Garden, 233 Squadron reverted to their former task of flying freight and wounded to and from France. Training with gliders resumed in earnest at the beginning of 1945 in preparation for Operation Varsity; the second attempt to secure an airborne bridgehead across the Rhine, this time using the British 6th and US 17th Airborne Divisions. Twenty-four of the Squadron's Dakotas towed Horsas to their landing zones on the first and only lift of this successful operation; no losses are believed to have been sustained amongst the aircrews

271 Sqdn RAF, 46 Group	Doncaster Down Ampney	Harrow Bombay HP42 Dakota	In 1940, the squadron was created from the former 1680 Flight at Doncaster, in a transport role. Equipment mostly consisted of the Handley Page Harrow, supplemented with the Bristol Bombay and civil airliners impressed into military service, including the Handley Page H.P.42s from Imperial Airways. From 1942 they began an association with the airborne forces and this role would show an increasing prominence in the Squadron's mission. Airborne training flights were a commonplace task during 1942 and 1943. The Squadron was transferred to the newly formed Transport Command in March of 1943, and was re-equipped with Douglas Dakotas from August, although a flight of Harrows were retained as air ambulances. The squadron took part in the invasion of Normandy in 1944; on D-Day it dropped men of the 3rd Parachute Brigade and towed Airspeed Horsa gliders. Further support for the Allied landings and the battle for France followed, including support for the Battle of Arnhem.

In November leaflet dropping flights began over France and in February 1943 Halifaxes were received as additional aircraft. In June 1943 the Halifaxes were engaged in towing gliders to North Africa, a task which they continued until September. In October conversion to Albermarles began and these continued supply drops to the resistance forces in France while the squadron trained for its part in the invasion of Europe. On the eve of D-Day a 295 squadron aircraft shared with one of 570 squadron the distinction of dropping the first troops of the invasion force into Normandy. This was followed by twenty one aircraft of No 295 squadron towing gliders to the landing zones. Nineteen more followed during the day with reinforcements. In September 1944 the squadron sent twenty two Stirlings towing gliders to Arnhem followed by seventy five supply aircraft in the succeeding days, three being lost.

Leaflet dropping flights began in October and in July 1943 Albermarles were received to supplement the Whiteleys. By February 1944 the squadron was completely equipped with Albermarles and these flew supply dropping flights to resistance forces in France until D-Day. Twenty four Albermarles took airborne troops to Normandy before the landings and twenty more followed during the day. At Arnhem in September No 297 Squadron towed twenty eight gliders to the landing zones following next day with twenty four more. In October the squadron converted to Halifaxes and supplied thirty of these for the airborne part of the Rhine crossing in March 1945.

On the eve of D-Day the squadron sent six aircraft with Horsa gliders to capture the Orne bridges before the main landings and later towed fifteen gliders to the landing grounds in Normandy. For the Arnhem landings the squadron towed thirteen Horsa gliders and seven Hamilcars on the first day and eight of each on the second. Ten Horsas on the third day took reinforcements to the 1 st Airborne Division. For the Rhine crossing No 298 squadron contributed tugs for twenty five Horsas and six Hamilcars and after the end of the war took troops to Norway and Denmark.

Initially it was equipped with Venturas but in January 1944 replaced these with Stirlings. Training with the airborne forces took up most of the squadrons time but on 5 April No 299 squadron flew its first supply dropping mission to France with supplies for the resistance forces. On D-Day twenty four Stirlings of the squadron took paratroopers to Normandy before dawn and followed these by sixteen aircraft towing gliders into the dropping zones, losing two aircraft in the process. Supply drops continued until the next major airborne operation, the capture of the bridges at Grave, Nijmegen and Arnhem. Between 17 and 23 September the squadron dispatched fifty four glider tugs (on the first three days) and seventy two re-supply aircraft to arnhem, losing five aircraft to concentrated enemy flak in the process. The final airborne landing of the war at Wesel during the rhine crossing met with little resistance and twenty nine sorties were flown without loss. In May 1945 airborne troops were taken to Oslo to disarm the German occupation forces and after a period of general transport duties the squadron was disbanded on 15 February 1946

Mosquitos were flown on shipping reconnaissance missions along the Norwegian coast while a flight of Catalinas was based at nearby Woodhaven for patrols to the north of Scotland. Contact was also maintained with resistance forces in Norway by special duties flights which landed men and supplies on the Norwegian coast. In August 1944 the Mosquito flight moved to join a strike wing at Banff, often acting as a pathfinder unit to locate shipping concealed in fjords for other strike squadrons. During June 1945 the squadron moved to Norway and passed to the control of the Royal Norwegian Air Force on 21 November 1945

Sixteen Liberators arrived during the month and crew training began. After moving to Digri in January 1945 the squadron flew its first bombing mission on 13 January when eight aircraft bombed Mandalay. This however proved to be the only bombing operation flown as the squadron was then allotted to Special Duties. These consisted of dropping agents and supplies into enemy occupied territory in the course of which long flights were undertaken. The fact that the first SD operation on 22 January lost three out of eleven aircraft illustrates the hazards of this type of mission when, apart from the distances and weather problems involved, low altitude flights over enemy territory had to be made to locate dropping zones. Such flights continued until the end of the war and after Japanese surrender supplies were dropped to prisoner of war camps in Malaya, Sumatra and Java until an airlift could be arranged to bring the occupants out to Allied bases. On 19 November 1945 the squadron was sent off for disbandment which took place two days later

437 Squadron RCAF	Blakehill Farm, UK	Dakota Anson	Formed at Blakehill Farm on 4 September 1944, it was equipped with Dakotas in the airborne forces role. Its first operation was Operation Market Garden, the airborne assault on the Rhine bridges. 14 of its aircraft towed gliders into Arnhem on 17 September and a further six followed the next day. It then settled into flying routine shuttle services onto the continent as well as continuing re-supply mission into Arnhem. 1. Ansons joined the squadron in November and it maintained its shuttle services until March 1945, when the squadron began training for Operation Varsity, the crossing of the Rhine, which took place on 24 March. Having towed 24 Horsa gliders during the crossing the squadron returned to its normal routine.

Flights to Gibraltar and North Africa were carried out until February 1944, when the squadron began training with airborne forces. For some weeks prior to D-Day unarmed Dakotas carried out leaflet dropping flights over France and on the day of the landings 32 aircraft were dispatched with paratroops before dawn, followed during the day by 17 more towing gliders. Casualty evacuation flights from France began soon afterwards and continued for the rest of the war interspersed with general transport duties. During the Arnhem landings, 46 gliders were towed into the landing zone in the initial two days, followed by 29 resupply missions for the loss of 3 Dakotas. During the crossing of the Rhine in March 1945 24 aircraft of No 512 Squadron towed gliders, losing one in the process. After flying services to the Middle East, the squadron moved to Egypt and in December to Italy, operating routes to various points in the Balkans. On 23 February 1946 No 512s aircraft began moving back to the UK and it disbanded on 14 March 1946

It carried out night bombing missions until 19 November 1943, moving a few days later to Leicester East to become an airborne forces squadron. Training in glider towing and supply dropping was supplemented by operational trips over France to drop supplies to resistance forces which began on 4 February 1944. Early on D-Day, No 620 Squadron provided twenty three Stirlings to drop paratroops in Normandy, following up later with eighteen glider tows. On the opening day of the Arnhem landing, six Stirlings dropped paratroops and nineteen towed gliders into the landing zones, followed by sixty one supply flights in the course of which five Stirlings were lost. In January 1945 tactical bombing operations began to be flown against major targets behind the German front line and on the last major airborne attack of the war thirty aircraft towed gliders across the Rhine.
